WHAT VRG SUPPLIES

Capability, not a list of contracts performed. The awarded row is the separate, verifiable claim.

Line-item requirements with a part number. An NSN or a manufacturer part number, a revision, a quantity, a unit of issue and a destination. Where a requirement names an exact revision, that revision is what gets quoted — substitutions are raised as a question, not shipped as a decision.

Electrical and mechanical consumables. Conduit and fittings, valves, cable and connectors, filters and replacement parts. The common shape is a short list of specified items against a dated requirement, not a catalogue relationship.

Delivery to a named destination. Including government receiving points with their own marking, packaging and inspection rules — ASTM D3951 and MIL-STD-129 where the requirement calls for them, and origin inspection scheduled with the assigned QA specialist.

HOW VRG QUOTES AND DELIVERS

Stock and lead time confirmed in writing before a date is offered

A delivery date is only as good as the supplier commitment under it. VRG confirms on-hand quantity and lead time in writing — for the full quantity, not a partial — before putting a date in front of a contracting officer. This is first on the list because VRG has paid for the alternative.

Packaging, marking and inspection priced in

Bare-item marking, packaging specs and origin inspection are scope, not overhead. Where a requirement's marking rule and the manufacturer's print disagree, VRG asks for direction before marking a critical-application item rather than guessing.

Partial shipment raised early, never discovered late

When a supplier holds part of a quantity now and the balance on lead time, that is said at quote time so the buyer can decide whether a partial delivery helps. A split found at the delivery date is a missed delivery; the same split found at quote time is a priced option.

The receiving report is the finish line

Not the ship date. Submission through the government's own system, and the paperwork complete, is what closes a supply order — and it is what an award is judged on afterwards.
